NEWSMAKER of the week

Harry B. Cohen Advertising Co., which grew from $600,000 to $8-$10 million billings in 10 years, has broadened top management responsibilities by appointing Educard Aleshire president of the agency, now renamed Cohen & Aleshire. Chairman of the board Harry B. Cohen attributes move to growth of billing, need to give clients top-level counsel.

The newsmaker: "The strength of an agency our size. Leyond shaping creative media and copy approaches, is the individual, in-depth marketing advice each client can get from our top management." says Edward Aleshire.

The responsibility of the modern agency, he believes, is to render personalized business service for the client, going in depth into all those areas of marketing that have an influence upon the client's broad advertising aims.

"This means, to us, that each account has the right to personal attention from the agency principals," he told spossor.

Because of the agency's growth (from nine employees in 1947 to more than 100 in 1957). Harry B. Cohen felt that the top management responsibilities need to be shared. Today he has a team of three high-level men in key management positions and "no more than three weeks ever go by but what all three of us have talked with each client. We all attend every important business meeting any client holds."

Aleshire sees Cohen & Aleshire as "business counsellors rather than advertising agents. Each of our accounts opens the books to us completely. This is vital on packaged goods where advertising is the only controllable variable between one brand and another.

While he feels that it is difficult to delineate responsibilities in a clear line at the helm of an agency, it is generally believed that Harry Cohen will concentrate on top management client contact, while Aleshire will bring to management conferences his long background in the various creative areas of advertising.

"Creative people seldom get into management." he says, "either because they aren't given the chance or because they don't want to." Nonetheless, Aleshire has long felt that the agencyman on the planning level must combine the creative and business functions to be effective. The emphasis upon a broad marketing approach to advertising, he adds, has put a new stress on "business-awareness" on every level of copy and media strategy development.

Aleshire himself combined the two functions as the agency's creative director and executive v.p. during the past 10 years. In this capacity he supervised all planning, art and copy on such major package goods accounts as Grove Laboratories, Doeskin, Utica Club beer, Lydia Pinkham and Pharma-Craft.

The smart creative person, he concludes, can find the thing most important to any product. "the selling idea, the copy hook, the reason for the existence of the product. Then the copy starts. Copy's no good unless you complete this second step of crystallizing scientific or product research into copy people will understand. There's no feeling in the world like seeing a commercial move many thousands of people to perform one small act—buying."

SPONSOR PUBLICATIONS INC.

The quickest way to generate heat in the industry this week was to start a discussion of ty barter deals.

In part the commotion has been stirred up anew over the possibility that P&G would enter into one of the manifold time-for-film propositions. The fact that P&G eventually didn't do it is a genuine consolation for the anti-barter forces, but no end to the controversy as a whole.

In a nutshell, the contenders in the barter arena define their stances thus

- The anti-barter fellows claim that in the long run the practice is bad for the business from every angle, because it is based on "fringes"—the lesser stations searching for near-free programing, the ultra-sharp advertisers looking for bargains. This, say the opponents, will corrupt the medium eventually in that quality will become vastly secondary to price.
- The barter boys meantime contend that they are filling a vacuum economically which hasn't been filled in any other way.

These quotes gathered by SPONSOR-SCOPE this week reflect some of the mounting nneasiness created by the barter problem:

MEDIA DIRECTOR OF AN AGENCY BILLING OVER $50 MILLION IN TV-Any device that evades the standard procedure of briving according to card-rate or unoted program price in the long run can do irreparable damage to both tv and the agencies.

HEAD TIMEBUYER OF AN AGENCY DOING OVER $10 MILLION IN SPOTlt looks to me as though to hasn't done a hard enough creative selling job on the smaller advertiser. Here's the area the barter boys have been quick to exploit.

A MAJOR REP: Unless this bedlam is controlled—if not discouraged altogether it can turn into a destructive economic force for every facet of the television industry.

SALES MANAGER OF A LEADING TV FILM FIRM: We are deeply disturbed by the penetration of barter deals, but we can't idly sit by while competitors feed the barter pool. So, just this week we assigned somebody in our organization to examine all aspects of barter.

(See 3 Angust SPONSOR for a definitive updating of the barter situation.)

Spot radio seems headed for a spectacular summer.

SPONSOR-SCOPE this week checked with a number of reps on how radio stacked up on their books: It found that business was running anywhere from 40 to 60% over last year's levels.

Don't be surprised to find P&G back in the network radio fold in the near future. (After virtually underwriting daytime radio 20 years ago, P&G has eschewed the medium of late except for sporadic spot.)

Two of the Cincinnati giant's agencies—Y&R and Compton—are putting together material on the current status of network radio for P&G appraisal.

Y&R's project among other things will (1) classify the various ways of buying network radio today, and (2) outline how some of the "tonnage" buys can be used for special promotional effects.

Afternoon network tv may develop into one of the hottest competitive sectors this fall.

A new and lively contender. ABC TV, is set to tee off with Lucky Lady (specially developed as an afternoon magnet). Moreover, this week various media people told SPONSOR-SCOPE that ABC's daytime rate structure is beginning to draw real attention.

Earlier in the year ABC sliced its daytime rates to a third the night-time rate. An added inducement for the close buyer: The network's maximum discount is 32.5%, compared to the competitors' earnable peaks of 25%.

This item should set Hollywood back on its heels: A tv advertiser has exacted the right to reject any film script for whatever reason he sees fit.

The client that broke the story-control barrier is Goodyear—with Y&R providing the strategy.

The series involved is the Alcoa-Goodyear Anthology, scheduled for this fall.

All the major agencies work closely with tv film producers on script supervision. But this makes the first known instance where the buyer's absolute powers are stipulated by contract.

Here is a would-be news item that conked out this week, but is reported nevertheless because of its straw-in-the-wind value:

Revlou's Revson Bros. were faced with their own multi-million question: Should they move the $64,000 Question from CBS TV to ABC TV?

They didn't. It stays with CBS for a third season.

But there was some soul-searching before the decision was finalized, and that mere fact made the media fraternity pick up its ears. For one of the Revlon agencies had contended strongly that—without changing time or number of stations—a switch would save about $2.5 million over the next 70 weeks.

The potential moral, as Madison Avenue sees it: Can a network always be sure of its traditionally dominant position when the shows are controlled by somebody else?

There's a growing school of researchers in agencies which holds that, regardless of ratings, it's advantageous to switch network to shows every two or three years.

Their reasoning: You get a high degree of audience conversion for your commercials with every program change.

Exception: Those shows which use different people each week or have periodic turnovers in their personalities.

Pharmaceuticals, which—like Revlon—had been riding high on the ty boom the past two years, expects to increase its network investment to $12 million during 1957-58.

Last season the figure ran to $10.5 million.

Like all big spenders in tv. Pharmaceuticals is now faced with the penalty of its own success: How to get enough new products to feed the demand it is creating. It has several new ones on tap.

You'll hear more and more about pre-planning where pilots of tv series are concerned.

TPA will announce this new policy: 1) Pilots to be produced only after extensive consultation with advertisers, agencies, networks, stations; and 2) after extensive audience reaction studies.

With policy TPA has created new "produce to order" department, under Bruce Eells. TPA West Coast v.p.

Previously RKO Teleradio and NBC TV Films had put similar emphasis on pre-planning before production.

Sale of the Mutual Network may have this warning for the business: Guaranteed circulation is a ticklish tool for air media to work with.

As SPONSOR-SCOPE went to press, Tom O'Neil (RKO Teleradio) and Paul Roberts (West Coast broadcaster who heads the group dickering for MBS) were still arranging the bookkeeping details of the deal.

Transfer of ownership is to take effect 31 July.

Historical note: The nucleus of Mutual was formed in September 1931. Among its presidents were Frank White and Edgar Kobak. The founding general manager was Fred Weher.

The Mrs. Scott Bullitt interests in the Northwest this week joined the widening group-ownership list with the purchase of KREM and KREM-TV. Spokane, for $2 million.

Bullitt also owns KING and KING-TV, Seattle, and KGW and KGW-TV, Portland.

Judging from a rate sheet issued to agencies this week. Pat Weaver's Program Service appears to be putting sales emphasis pretty much on the spot formula.

The sheet offered one-minute particinations in the Monday through Friday Mary Margaret McBride tv show (half-hour) on this basis:

- Gross program cost: $150.
- Approximate time costs in eight markets: $610.
- Approximate time costs in five additional markets: $170.

According to the sheet, basic eight markets cover 31.5% of U. S. ty homes, while the 13 provide 15.9% coverage.

(See News Wrap-Up for Ding-Dong School-Climax Industries sales.)

Edsel will unveil its line to the press late in August.

Meanwhile Ford is negatiating with Bing Croshy, through CBS TV, for a 90-minute special to introduce the newcomer to the public some time in September.

The first set of Edsel commercials have been completed (the films are being guarded as closely as Fort Knox).

With Cheyrolet (naturally) as target, Blair this week presented its updated story on spot radio to Campbell-Ewald in Detroit.

Blair's plan is to make the rounds of all the major automotive agencies with this presentation as quickly as possible.

One of the key points: Car makers are underestimating the effectiveness of spot radio by using it only on a seasonal basis—a continuous program would pay much higher dividends comparatively.

American Tobacco assured SPONSOR-SCOPE this week that the hig hundle it's nancing into snot radio the next 13 weeks is in no way connected with the latest cancer unroar (as some in the trade seem to think).

These seturation campaigns in behalf of Lucky Strike, Hit Parade, and Pall Mall, say ATC adman, were planned long ago.

Some 80 markets plus the Keystone Network are on the schedule.

In many of the markets there's this change of strategy: From news periods to announcements.

Reps contacted for availabilities had to skirt this pitfall: How their stations would be able to slot these three brands among the other cigarettes already on schedule.

Snot radio this week was also happy over schedules from two competitors in the cake-mix field—General Mills and Duncan Hines (P&G).

General Mills is buying 20 announcements a week for 10 weeks, using two and three stations in a market. The 10-week budget: $230,000 (BBDO).

FCB's initial move in taking over the Tidewater Oil account was to point it in the syndication direction via Highway Patrol (Ziv) in 126 markets.

TvB credits Tidewater with an expenditure of $320,000 in spot tv time for 1956.

Nestle (Bryan Honston) is switching the money it's been spending on Blondie (NBC TV) to half-hour syndicated films.

It wants to concentrate its fire in the markets where its most needed.

Flav-R-Straws is annexing another grocery store item which it thinks it put over with the help of tv.

The new product is Easy-Juicer, a plastic lemon-shaped container of pure lemon juice, introduced by the Luther Breck Co., of Boston. Tv would be the wheelhouse, as was the case with Flav-R-Straw.

(Flay-R-Straw spent $1.6 million in spot ty last year.)

At the rate P&G now is vacing along in daytime network tv it's perhaps getting as many brand impressions weekly as it gathered in its radio heyday.

NO. PROGRAM SERIES	NO. ¼ HRS. PER WK.	NO. COMMERCIALS	NO. IMPRESSIONS
8	41	123	246 per home

What would be the impact on advertising if the highest courts upheld the right of Masters, the discount chain, to ship appliances to consumers in fair-trade states?

SPONSOR-SCOPE this week quizzed key agency marketing men on the topic, and got this almost unanimous response:

- Wherever a variable price structure springs up, you have to fight for more volume to keep profits coming in.
  - The only way that volume can be achieved is through more advertising. GE is pressing the litigation against Masters.

Manufacturers apparently are convinced that to survive competition they must depend more and more on mass advertising and promotion and less on personal selling.

This point was sharply driven home by findings reported this week by the American Management Association. Here's the line of reasoning:

- 1) Marketing expenses took an average of one-tenth of the total sales income dollar in 64 companies recently surveyed by the AMA.
- 2) That 10% represents a bigger bite than ever. So to keep it in check, the manufacturer must rely on the economies of mass advertising.

Joe Culligan, NBC Radio major-domo, waxed philosophical this week about the virtues of sticking with an idea until it pans out.

He recalled how Monitor, after its first blush, took a dive in ratings and advertiser interest.

Monitor's present status: The SRO sign will be out this fall.

Timebuyers at work

Bob Glatzer, Ben Sackheim. New York, says: "Presently our agency is closing one of the largest spot buys ever made for a first-time regional television advertiser. Our client. Nationwide Insurance Co. of Columbus, Ohio, has bought I Remember Mama. It will run in 36 Eastern and Midwestern markets for 52 weeks starting October lst. We feel the buy is a healthy departure from the current practice among Nationwide's competitors, who are buying news, sports and network spectaculars. Our campaign is calculated to bring home on the local level the meaning of Nationwide's maxim. 'In Service with People.' We expect I Remember Mama, with its readily identifiable home characters, to create a climate of warmth and respect for Nationwide's agents in their communities, in keeping with the company's long history of service and integrity. We've kept this basic point in mind in our discussions with the stations. Since we expect the stations to carry the burden of local show promotion and merchandising, we are selecting stations which can show us results in this field, since promotion and merchandising are as vital as the programing itself."

Marie Coleman, Donahue & Coe, New York, says: "Introducing the new product to the public is an important timebuying challenge. I feel it's best to initiate a campaign which has scope, rather than select a single target for your advertising. It's too early to tell who the potential buyers will be. Many advertisers have made the mistake of too quickly calculating the market for their product, to find later through research that their product was selling to entirely different customers. Or others have found that they were only tapping a fraction of their potential market. Even when it's more or less pre-determined by type of product who will buy, serious errors can be made that can handicap the selling of the product—perhaps not as to market, but as to the type of programing that will best create a demand. If similar products are already being sold, their programing isn't necessarily a good guide. Remember, your product is new and mustn't get lost in the spot shuffle. Since there is no formula, the advertiser should seek a large audience provided by round-the-clock saturation combined with special announcements for the audience most likely to buy."

Excitement in Alaskan television

I'd like to devote these picas to three subjects, the first being Station KENI-TV, Anchorage, Alaska. Here brevity is essential since I spent only a short time with two gentlemen from this outlet on the way to and from a recent Alaskan fishing trip.

However, one need not take long to become infected with the enthusiasm for their market and devotion to the medium which Hal Champeness and his boss Al Bramstedt, possess in abundance.

Anchorage is a non-interconnected community of approximately 45,000 people, growing faster than almost any we have here in the States. It is a fiercely proud, modern town and as ty-minded as any you've witnessed.

Not a Tundra & Blubber operation

Success stories (a milk company contest, for example); the pride in their remote programing (of the annual dog sled race); their modern equipment, quickly dispel any ideas you might have had about this being strictly a Tundra & Blubber operation. From a hard-headed business point-of-view, KENI-TV is as exciting as Alaska itself. More can't be said! It does a Madison Avenue-ite good to get away once in a while from a town where million-dollar budgets are commonplace bar-talk and six-camera set-ups are the order of the day. By the same token it is refreshing to get a first-hand glimpse of what skill, ingenuity and unflagging devotion can do—even with one camera!

By the way, you might be interested in a quick run-down from a recent Saturday's Anchorage Times as evidence of the part tv plays in the community. In addition to a detailed listing of the week's television on both KTVA and KENI-TV, there's the same for radio—all three stations. There are two tune-in ads—both on NTA features, and both starring Gene Tierney. There are several by-lined articles, one about the demise of the Caesar program, another about the Fairy Tale kick of the up-coming season, all up-to-date matter in the jargon and tempo of our fair trade.

Point two—wherein I believe television can take a leaf from the success stories of the print copywriters. There has been, of late, a rash of advertising campaigns in newspapers and magazines in which the models used were real people who look like real people. Big switch! In place of the model agency favorites with vapid look, brainless stare and characterless face. The New York Times, for example, is using human beings. It just so happens I know most of them, so I can vouch for the fact that they live in houses, pay taxes, have children and do not carry patent leather hat boxes or wear wedgies in the shower. For the above reason, the ads in which they appear are believable, interesting and vital.

Other recent print campaigns have been achieving this effect too. How unlike most television copy where the damsel in the kitchen looks as if she were scared the washer would bite her and whose Boston accent (as she scrubs hubby's grimy work clothes) is as out of place as Yogi Berra at a Back Bay lawn party. Maybe we ought to try real people too!

Finally, I'd like to spend a word or two in an attempt to admonish the publishers of this sheet for bothering to present the nonsense that Mr. Budd Schulberg spread upon these pages several issues ago. Since the purpose of a trade book is, I believe, to be of constructive assistance to an industry, little can be served by the exaggerations and contrived accusations of this author. We can take criticism of course. Also we deserve some. But not of the type leveled at us by Mr. S. Since we're used to such drivel, we usually pay it no attention, yet when one of our own publications devotes space to it—well, that's a bit different.

Bush league reporter

Mr. Schulberg has long made a good thing out of fictionizing. He should stick to it. When he tries to be a reporter (though I must say he didn't try very hard) he's a real bush leaguer. Where or from whom he gained his "knowledge" of agency people and practices I can't say. I can't even guess. Maybe he did sit in briefly on an actual meeting to gain the depth of knowledge he blithely owns up to. Sort of like the guy who spent 20 minutes between planes in Moscow and then lectures on Communism and the USSR. Or the fellow who went to Alaska for a week and is an expert on Arctic tv.

I haven't seen Mr. Schulberg's movie yet. Expect to soon and I know I'll enjoy it thoroughly—not as social document, but as an hour-plus of diversion, enhanced by Necco wafers and Crackerjack. I don't even resent Mr. Schulberg. In fact I admire him. But I do wince at the editors of this book falling for such a shoddy and obvious publicity piece.

SPONSOR's reply to Bob Foreman

There are few occasions on which sponsor disagrees with Bob Foreman whose depth of ability and judgment is widely recognized. This is one of those rare occasions. We suspect Bob is less objective on this subject than he is on most other topics. Though we share his anger at uninformed critics, we do not believe the advertising business itself can afford to ignore attacks from public figures like Budd Schulberg who command a large audience. And so we carried (1) Schulberg's viewpoint, (2) a followup in which admen explained fallacies in that viewpoint and (3) an editorial calling for advertising to do a better job of selling its role to the public. We believe such a p.r. effort is badly needed: we doubt much will be done about it if critics are merely dismissed as uninformed.

MOVING FORCE IN BUFFALO

To keep 18 "Your Host" Restaurants busy 24 hours a day, and to get new units off to a fast start, the Robert S. Risman Advertising Agency, Inc. buys nighttime station-breaks on WBUF...

NIGHTTIME STATION-BREAKS, because these good adjacencies at a good price mean "Your Host" reaches more people, with greater frequency, stimulating traffic just when restaurant activity hits the late-evening lull.

WBUF, because, in the words of Robert S. Risman, president of the Robert S. Risman Advertising Agency, "we believed that under NBC management, WBUF would live up to its great potential. In buying more time on WBUF than on all other television stations in the area combined, we anticipated a substantial metropolitan, rural and Canadian audience, at reasonable cost.

"Our faith has been completely justified. Our client's business volume is up. The 'Your Host' restaurant chain is continuing to expand. And much of the credit must go to television station WBUF, where our spots now reach  $77^{\circ}c$  more audience than when we started a year ago."

Women's week

Christmas in July: "Seasons are mixed up for agency stylists," says Y&R tv stylist Pat Miller. "We're shooting Christmas commercials right now. This means trying to second-guess what the Paris fashions this fall might do to the feminine line by winter."

Her tips on how to stay ahead of the times in dressing gals for commercials:

- 1. Stick to simple fashions because you can't guess as wrong on these.
  - 2. Make costumes appropriate for the occasion to be filmed.
- 3. Ilave girls dress in clothes the viewers can identify with. (This rules out high fashion for most commercials. Of course, there are exceptions in commercials that try to convey a glamor mood with evening clothes, but here too the classic styles are safest.)

The tv stylist's nightmare: Another Dior revolution.

Women and cars: There may be a day when women industrial designers will become the trend in Detroit. Certainly women are playing an increasingly important role in influencing the designing and styling of cars.

"The woman's most important with the second-car market," says Lou Hagopian, Plymouth director of advertising. "But with the first car, she at least has a veto power."

Conscious of the woman's power, every major car manufacturer in Detroit today employs fashion consultants and agencies to advise on color schemes, upholstery patterns . . . and, even the dress styles for the next year, since these might dictate major car styling changes.

Cigar-smoking manners: Rose-Martin Advertising, agency for E. Regensburg & Sons (Medalist cigars), is convinced that women have a big effect upon cigar smoking.

"A strong protest from the wife can kill that after-dinner cigar," says Irl W. Rose. II, president of the agency.

To squelch this protest, Rose-Martin has put its cigar account p.r. campaign into the hands of Stearn Hillstrom, the agency's lady p.r. vice president. After her return from a European vacation, Stearn will be promoting cigar-puffing as "soul-satisfying."

To the cigar-smokers of America, she proposes the following woman-tested etiquette:

- 1. Don't chew on an unlit or wet cigar butt.
- 2. Take cigar out of mouth when talking.
- 3. Use ashtrays large enough to hold the ashes.
- 4. Don't trail ashes behind you in office, restaurant or home.
- 5. Keep live ash short. Suspense is unpleasant for onlookers.

Adds Stanley Kolker, assistant to the president of the Cigar institute of America: "Cigar smoking manners are important if people around a smoker are to enjoy the smoker's pleasure."

When do commercials lose impact?

We are looking for some research material pertaining to the saturation of commercials. We are particularly interested in the impact curve of commercials on sales as it pertains to the number of times a particular commercial is used, over what span of time or number of programs, or whatever else has been developed and reported in this field.

Two fm's make beautiful music

I was gratified to see a mention of fm radio in your item about stereophonic sound. Is it that there's so little news in the fm field? Naturally, those of us in fm. and especially those of us in fm only. feel that the medium is being overlooked. May I suggest that you keep a news eye on the Fm Development Association.

In the stereophonic article (29 June 1957, page 68) you mentioned that the necessary ingredients for stereo are "1) two stations (either two am or an am and an fm)." Please be advised two of our brothers in the Los Angeles area are broadcasting stereo, and they are fm only. For several months KCBH-FM and KHOF-FM have been broadcasting two hours of stereo each Sunday afternoon. Just this month, KCBH-FM and KMLA-FM have started broadcasting six hours of stereo every Sunday. As interest in stereo usually comes as a follow-up of high fidelity, no other system can offer the listener the advantages of both stereo and high fidelity as can two fm stations.

Your omission was small, but it's big to the fm-only operators. Even though you seldom mention my medium, I still read your magazine from cover to cover.

Jim Hodges commercial manager, KQXR, Bakersfield, Calif.

High results not high pressure

In your "Sponsor Hears" section. June 29 issue, you attribute the large number of commercials heard on small town stations to the work of "high-pressure contest promoters," and mention that there are some thirty such groups operating out of New York.

I do not take issue with your figures regarding the organized high-pressure sales groups, but I do take exception to your implication that most small town stations running a full commercial schedule do so because of the efforts of these hit-and-runners. Certainly, many small market radio stations do allow outside crews to come in and sell a quick gimmick-deal, but by far the greater majority of the successful small market station operators have made their own success. The small station owner has always derived the major share of his income from the local merchant, and during the period of television's ascent felt far less financial pain than those larger stations who depended so much on national business. The small town retail advertiser is one of radio's greatest fanshe has seen radio bring him results at point of sale and knows its value.

So, next time you tune your car radio to a small town station, chances are not that a "... crew of high-pressure contest promoters has been working in the area." Odds are that you are listening to a station operated by a good businessman who has been getting results for other good businessmen for many, many years.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO BE A GIANT TO COMPETE

So says Earle Ludgin of Chicago agency of the same name. Small agency or client can fight the majors—and win—with creativity. What's creativity? Surprise, agility, imagination and humor

> CHICAGO Tyou don't have to be a giant to compete with one.

> This is what Earle Ludgin, board chairman of the Chicago agency bearing his name, illustrates with ideas and action for his accounts and his staff every minute of the advertising day. His agency and its $14 million billing appear bite size in comparison with the giant may of a J. Walter Thompson. And many of his accounts appear Lilliputian in contrast to their own multi-million-dollar competitors. But Ludgin competes with JWT and Rath, previously an unknown from Waterloo, lowa, now bests many a meat packer in its own trade.

A midget can compete with any giant if he can best him on one score—the vital area mystically described as creativity. This is the credo of Ludgin the man and Ludgin the agency.

Ludgin, as everyone knows, is a creative agency. It hires creative people. spends laborious hours planning creative campaigns, sends out top-echelon speakers to beat industry bushes with words designed to enflame all onlookers with the need for creativity.

Creativity by osmosis: Modern handwoven rug, part of extensive art collection, frames (from I.) Earle Ludgin, bd. chm.; Jane Daly, v.p., tv-radio; Vincent Bliss, president

Ludgin says the agency with a future has to have a bedrock in marketing solidified by creative people and new, adventuresome ideas

What most people don't know is what creative means in Earle Ludgin's dictionary. The term is no artificial barrier dividing the writing and art units from such areas as the account group, administration and research. Earle Ludgin and Co. is first a marketing agency, secondly a creative agency, thirdly an operation geared to creative marketing at every job level in the company.

An example of this integration: Rath Packing, which had never advertised nationally, was studied by Ludgin marketers intensively for some seven months before the first campaign specific was put on paper. The recommendation: spot television to gain distribution and to make sales for the frozen pork, beef and veal Chopettes. Creative copy and creative buying which followed creative planning have led to an outstanding sales record for the company.

What are the components of a creative agency? Earle Ludgin gives some of his reasoning.

"A creative agency doesn't rely on formulae of any kind. Every advertiser's problem is a different one and the first requirement is to isolate the problem itself. Within each problem there is and must be a solution. As a marketing agency, our concern is to consider the facts first as presented by marketing and then proceed to the creative."

What gives an agency that margin of difference from its colleagues which makes it able to compete with giants? Ludgin says the "unexpected will do it." imagination, agility. humor — but you have to use it judiciously—and the "offbeat which is still in beat."

These qualities are unusually effective giant-killers in broadcast media campaigns, says Ludgin. "A formula was developed in the days of radio, a formula of triteness and repetition in programs and commercials which gave the agency and the client great wealth.

They'd rotate the same commercials in a regular pattern over the standard three-, six- or 12-week cycle and it worked commercially. Artistically, it was terrible.

"This pattern is no longer valid. The agency which repeats a success in the hope that this will be a formula rather than a simple pattern is in trouble. The very weight of advertising is suffocating some advertising. There's just too much of it. People shrug it off or they can't remember it at all or they have only a vague notion. Nothing can be more expensive than to have a good commercial not remembered.

"This is the creative job we have to do: first, to get ourselves seen or heard and then to get us recognized for who we are. Then we can make the sale."

How to get this recognition:

• Unexpectedness: "If the viewer or listener knows what you're going to do, you need a lot of weight to do it. Weight is insistence you can't avoid, so pervasive that the consumer can't escape. Few advertisers have the kind of money which buys this heavy weight. A normal advertiser with a normal budget must make himself seen, heard and felt against tremendous competition. The unexpected is the best way."

- Humor: "Humor must be treated very carefully so it doesn't overwhelm the story. It can't take possession of what is being done. We think a series of Helene Curtis commercials does this perfectly. Perhaps no more than 25% of the women used hair sprays when we introduced our European series of commercials for Spray Net. We used cities there for a connotation of pleasure, but every frame did some selling. We showed a London barrister whose wig was stiff, and told women theirs needn't be."
- Imagination: "The people we hire must be willing to go beyond their own experience, their own limitations. Some agency people do only what they have learned elsewhere; others are not basically original and they prefer patterns. Still others are oppressed. We don't want people who are comfortable in knowing a proven track. We try to find a different way before we accept the current way."

The agency administrators, headed by Earle Ludgin and by Vincent Bliss, its president, use their own imagination in finding things which will spark the free-wheeling ideas of the staff.

Some of these devices are more obvious than others. Ludgin's personal painting collection, a well known ex-

Midget to major is story of McLaughlin's Manor House coffee, regional account with almost 100% of budget in tv spot. Film commercial screening gets check by writers, producer. About 55% of Ludgin's $14 million goes to broadcast media

Midget-to-major epic is duplicated by Stopette, first spray deodorant on market which zoomed to incredible success with tv. Underwater film sequence, top award-winner at Chicago Federated Ad Club, shows "clean feeling" of product ample, is valued at several million dollars and is lumg on almost every wall of six floors in the LaSalle-Wacker Building on Chicago's riverfront. The paintings are rotated for the same reason ty and radio commercials are switched; to gain awareness, give the viewer new horizons, implant a feeling of pleasure accompanied by progressive change. There are also mobiles and sculptures.

Other approaches to sparking employee creativity are less obvious. To producer Clair Callilian recently arranged for half-hour film showings for all employees in the 36th floor conference room each month, one at noon and the other at 5 o'clock. Company officers, account executives, clerical workers and research people—all staffers—have a chance to see the visual techniques used in the world's classic movie productions rented from the Museum of Modern Art in New York.

This continued exposure both direct and subtle to new ideas is aimed at heightening awareness of concepts which are fresh and experimental as well as those which are old and proven. It all adds up, Ludgin thinks, to smarter employees, happier ones, more creative and productive ones.

President Bliss says "We struggle hard to break the patterns of behavior every time it can be done sensibly. We look for the roying thought. We channel the creative instinct toward an expanding market when we're talking with our clients. Creative thought applies to other than the techniques of creative expression. That's why our writers spend as much time on research as they do on writing.

"The giants are slower on their fect than we are. We want to increase the production and sales of our accounts by imaginative marketing and we're willing to go to much more than reasonable lengths in giving rein to special talents of our people. We don't want an inflexible organizational chart.

"We try to fit the business to our people. It's more difficult to keep our business well organized without a blueprint yet we know people work better without one. There just aren't enough good people in advertising."

The roving thought of which Blisspeaks has more room in which to rove in television, he says.

Big-city media people toured 200 miles in two days in a private bus. First day's tour was planned by WSTV-TV; second by Ohio group

TIMEBUYERS' TOUR

Some stations find it more profitable to take the agency buyer to the market than to sit in a far-away buying center and try to talk about an area. WSTV-TV, Steubenville, toured 17 media people thru Ohio's valley area for two days showing cities, industry and people

O ne of the roughest problems tackled by any station or rep is explaining a far-away market to a timebuyer or media man. How do you describe a city and trading zone, its people and customs, its station facilities and talent or its buying potential to a buyer who works in an office 1,000 miles away?

Some stations, such as WSTV-TV, Steubenville, Ohio, have found one answer: instead of taking the market to the buyers they deliver the buyers to the market. WSTV-TV recently conducted a two-day flurry of touring, sightseeing, education and fun for 17 buyers from three major advertising agency centers—New York, Chicago and Minneapolis.

Seventeen executives from The Friendly Group, which operates

WSTV, Inc., and other outlets, were joined by three members of Avery-Knodel station representative firm as hosts to the buyers and media people. Station president Jack N. Berkman and executive vice president John J. Laux toured the group in a private bus over 200 miles through the upper Ohio River valley.

They showed the buyers at first-hand evidences of the industrial boom in that area which last year brought in 16 new industries and created 5,000 new jobs. New construction within a 50-mile radius of the station is estimated to have cost more than $550 million.

The tv station conducted its own broadcast and fun tour the first day: the Ohio River Valley Development Council took over the second day.

Here are some of the tour features: Jack Berkman was host at a cocktail party in his home after the guests arrived by plane from the various cities. The following morning the group toured Steubenville Pottery, where the well known Russell Wright pottery is made. President Harry Wintringer showed the baking ovens in which the pieces are fashioned, taking the tour to the final step of hand decoration.

Next stop was the construction site of the new Cumberland locks and dam, a $75 million project just North of the city which is part of the modernization program to improve Ohio River navigation. Next to it the visitors saw the $116 million Ohio Edison power plant now being constructed to provide power for new industry in the valley.

Crossing the river into West Virginia, buyers lunched at a country club and toured the Weirton Steel Co. which employs 14,000 persons. Tracing production of steel, they saw molten steel being poured into cauldrons and the giant slabs being rolled down into thin sheets.

Returning to Stenbenville they attended a cocktail party where they met Ohio Governor William C. O'Neill, key speaker at a banquet which followed. The group then split up among three boats to travel the Ohio River for a night view of the city and some of its all-night industry operations.

THE PERFECT PRODUCT FOR A TV WEATHERCAST

Everyone knows about air-conditioning, especially in the hot months, but here's an advertiser who turned on the heat in the winter by talking about humidity. The Skuttle Manufacturing Co. of Milford, Mich., a pioneer in humidifiers and interior moisture control, decided to try and make the public humidity-conscious.

The firm launched a tv test campaign in the Grand Rapids area via Jaqua Co.. its agency. The buy: a five-minute weather report on WOOD-TV. Grand Rapids, featuring meteorologist Frank Slaymaker. The idea: a combination of Slaymaker's delivery and the program content would command more than routine attention for the commercial message.

The reasoning was right and the result impressive. In a six-month period (1 July through 31 December 1956) dealers sold over twice the number of humidifiers they had moved in the preceding 12 months, an increase of more than 200%.

The media strategy was straightforward. Television was selected because of its ability to both demonstrate the product and educate the public as to the effects and methods of controlling moisture in the air. The Grand Rapids test area, since it's the home base of the agency, allowed for a close check of the program, commercials and consumer response.

Originally signed for 13 weeks, the show was renewed to run until the end of the heating season. After the schedule was completed word-of-mouth assistance snowballed public response well into the summer months.

Meteorologist Frank Slaymaker delivers humidifier commercial on WOOD-TV weather report. Program more than quadrupled sales in tv test area nearby Clarington where they were met by a local high school band. They then visited the county seat, where again a band turned out to welcome them, and heard the mayor talk of the town, its citizens and local industry.

Wind-up to the tour was an ox roast in another small Ohio town, Barnesville, where local people were hosts at the feast in a city park. Manufacturers and businesses in the area set up an exhibit for the visitors to see.

Each phase of the tour was designed to give the far-away buyers a better understanding of the character and mood of the Ohio valley communities and the people who live in them. They contrasted urban with rural residents and got a briefing on the history of the area and its future goals.

The Avery-Knodel people there were Glenn Gilbert of the Detroit office, Bill Harms of Chicago and Bob Kizer of New York. Other Friendly Group executives attending were Harry Burke. vice president and general manager of KODE-TV, Joplin, Mo.; George Clinton, vice president and general manager of WBLK, Clarksburg, and WPAR, Parkersburg, W. Why should a station go to the trouble and heavy expense of such an elaborate tour for so many people?

Many stations don't think it is trouble and they figure the cost is saved many times over by giving the buyer first-hand familiarity with the market. And this kind of maneuver ends up saving everyone a lot of time: the media person in the agency, the rep and—many times—the visiting manager or salesman from the station.

For comments on this subject, see answers to "What is there about your market that a buyer must see personally to understand?" in SPONSOR Asks on page 44 of this issue. Among the big reasons: location, ratings, brochures and sales figures don't tell the whole station story; there are many variables in social and economic tastes and trends: cities are changing fast; each market area is unique and has certain pluses on which a buyer can capitalize.

TV COMMERCIALS WITH THE CONTINENTAL TOUCH

Like foreign movies and sports cars, the European filmed ty commercial fills a special niche without threatening U.S. product

Not every American in Paris these days is a tourist from the corn belt; he may well be a ty commercial producer from Madison Avenue. It could be a Joe Forest of Esty or a Mark Lawrence of MacManus, John and Adams, or some other U. S. adman on the continent to supervise shooting for some 60-second spots.

This does not imply a rush away from U. S. film studios and into the arms of overseas producers. Foreign-produced ty commercials still represent only a fraction of those showing up on American picture tubes. Their part in American ty is comparable to the role of foreign movies in the U.S.

not sufficient sales to threaten our market but, in their sphere, exciting enough to stimulate local creativity.

The increasing use of these foreign commercials is indicative of a constant effort on the part of U. S. agencies and their clients for the betterment of commercials. The televiewer in his living room may enjoy the show, but his gratitude to the sponsor does not obligate him to watch the commercial. So there is a natural concern among advertisers to produce commercials that command rather than repel audience attention.

"Here in the tv production department," one adman told SPONSOR, "we must face the fact that fee to is a lefthanded way of saying, 'Wouldn't it be nice to see the show without the commercials!" So the quest for fresh approaches and techniques will go on and oceans will not be barriers.

On this side of the Atlantic, some of the large ty commercial studios beyond U. S. borders are S. W. Caldwell, Robert Lawrence Productions, Williams & Hill. Crawley Films and Meridian, all in Canada, and Tompkins Productions in Mexico City. In Europe, some of the majors serving U.S. clients are: Joop Geesink (pronounced Yope Geezink). Amsterdam: Global Telefilms, Munich: Pearl and Deane, Ltd., London; and in Paris. Cinema et Publicité; Les Films Pierre Rémont; Post Parisien: Le Comete and Surat.

Many have U. S. representatives.

Puppets were chosen by Wm. Esty Co. for Ballantine Ale commercials to avoid confusion with their Beer spots. Joop Geesink's Dollywood studies in Amsterdam created the dolls and produced the series

Ballet, with original musical scores, is forte of Parisian film studios. Above is 60-second wine commercial for showing in French movie houses, a primary medium there. Spots are often applauded

Global, for example, has its headquarters in New York but its production staff in Munich. Joop Geesink (which is really the name of the studio's head; the studio itself is called Dollywood since it specializes in wooden puppets) is represented in this country by Transfilm of New York. Arco Film Productions. Inc., New York, has under contract the English studios of Pearl and Deane and the French firms of Cinema et Publicité, Les Films Pierre Rémont and Post Parisien.

Currently in production at Arco's Parisian studios is a 15-minute sponsored film for ty and non-theatrical distribution for Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. (MacManus. John and Adams). Other Arco clients include: P&G (B&B and Compton). Prudential Life Insurance (Calkins & Holden), Old Gold (Lennen & Newell). Chevrolet (Campbell-Ewald) and Chrysler (Mc-Cann-Erickson). The latter's film is the show opening for Shower of Stars: Arco did the multiplane and animation while Van Praag in the U.S. filmed the live sequences.

Joop Geesink's Amsterdam studio is currently producing the Ballantine Ale "Brewer's Gold" commercials for Wm. Esty Co. Among Global Telefilm's clients are Remington Shavers (Y&R) and Brylcreem (Atherton & Currier).

Many of these American clients are buying their commercials in color, not because they are using them in color now, but as an investment. Meanwhile they are using black-and-white prints for current telecasting.

What attracts clients into the fold of the foreign commercial producers? Price? Not necessarily. "Production costs are comparable to those in the United States." says René Oulman, president of Arco. "The advantage of using the French facilities is the availability of more production talent and more advanced types of animation and other effects for the same budget bracket."

This is not surprising, since France was the cradle of animation. Walt Disney and Max Fleishman before him brought back the technique from Paris in the early 1920's and introduced it to American theatregoers. This does not mean that French designers have held supremacy in the years since then. The U.S. developed animation to a very high degree. What has happened, however, is that in recent years the short subject field in Hollywood has dropped off with the result that today America is not offering the same high caliber of schooling in animation and design as in the 1930's.

The development of the French film commercial has meanwhile been furthered through the very nature of its use. These commercials weren't designed originally for television but for movie theatres. There they are screened between programs and they have had to be sufficiently entertaining to keep Gallic audiences (who have paid for

"Take trois:" The set is ready for action at Cinema et Publicite in Paris. As in foreign feature films. European commercials get top creative care and art treatment their seats) entertained. An added burden on the creativity of the producers is the fact that these advertising shorts are screened seven or eight in succession so they compete with each other for attention. In France, these "minute movies" have become a major media. They are often applauded.

The pictures, all with original musical scores, are made on 35 mm. Eastman color. Multiplane animation is combined with live-action or with model animation. Sets are imaginative, color effects are layish.

Animation costs, including original scores range from $60 a foot for the simpler techniques to $150 a foot for such complex techniques as multiplane and rotoscope. The cost of stop-motion (a European stronghold) is about $110 a foot.

Standard live-action, including original scores and recording, ranges from $5 to $13 per foot for a 60-second commercial depending on sets, size of cast, orchestration and facilities. Special techniques range from $7,000 to $18,000 per minute commercial, the latter figure applying to the most complex techniques including kaleidoscopic scenes as well as such effects as the combination of miniature sets and live actors, known in France as "trucage." "Trucage" makes possible the illusion of sets of unlimited size and the creation in depth of any realistic background, current or historical.

But what about the cost of sending New York or Chicago agency representatives to Europe to watch over the production?

A tourist flight for one person round trip is $558 from New York and for first class, it is $766. Air sleep seats or berths are extra. These fares, according to Arco, apply to all trans-Atlantic flights and it is possible to go by one air line and return by another. Fee for a passport is $10 and it is neccessary to have a photostat of a birth certificate or affidavit attesting to date and place of birth and citizenship. You will also need, when applying for your passport, a witness who has known you for at least two years.

Living expenses in Paris—hotels and restaurants—almost exactly parallel the range of those in New York City. Key staffers in most of the European production studios are bi-lingual, so language presents no problem.

Oulman points out that, in the case of his firm, it is not necessary that an agency send a production man to Paris since Arco executives travel back and forth regularly and maintain constant liaison between agencies and studios.

However, most advertisers like to be on the scene and it is a good idea. Selling an American product to an American to audience requires an American approach. The costume of a Dutch puppet may be just a shade too continental, some small mannerism of a French actress may tip off the folks back in Peoria that she is not "the all-American girl next door." Many U. S. producers in competition with the studios overseas see this "lack of understanding of the American market" as one of the pitfalls in using foreign commercials. They also believe a foreign studio's service to an agency can fall short of the service (making quick changes, etc.) offered here.

Nevertheless they recognize that for certain techniques and purposes the foreign commercial can fill a necessary niche, and they might as well live with it. For example, Zoli Vidor, A.S.C., of MPO-TV Films, Inc. will spend August in the major studio centers of Europe to observe production techniques, buy equipment and investigate possibilities of exchange agreements.

On the advertiser's side, here is a good example of why a foreign film studio was selected by a U. S. ad agency to produce commercials for a U. S. client. The commercials are the amusing "Brewer's Gold" series for Ballantine Ale, featuring the puppets and film techniques of Joop Geesink's Dollywood studios in Holland.

"Our choice to do these abroad." says Joe Forest, Esty's v.p. and commercial director. "was the result of some careful analysis. The product was the key to our thinking. Since Ballantine Beer also advertises on tv. Ballantine Ale commercials had to be outstandingly different. Ale is not beer. Yet in the public mind, and for many technical reasons, it is beer. Ale also represents a limited market compared with beer; it is a limited brew with a

Bill Coyle uses kinescope equipment for filming flip-card presentation

HOW TO PUT A FLIP-CARD PRESENTATION ON FILM

Prospective tv sponsors in the District of Columbia are getting a welcome relief from the usual flip-card sales presentation. WRC-TV, Washington, is making individual client pitches on kinescope film—and with special visual effects to boot.

It all happened when the ad manager of People's Drug Stores, Clayton Sanders, asked that a flip-card presentation prepared for him be converted into film so suppliers could see it. William E. Coyle, the station's director of public relations, promotion and advertising, set up a system of using live cameras to pick up the sales pitch for kinescope filming.

The system has other advantages; multiple prints can be supplied to a prospect's executive and field staff as well as to NBC TV Spot Salesmen in other cities for use in showing and selling a local personality, and the advertiser can see exactly how his on-the-air commercial will look.

WRC-TV has a visual effects device which adds punch to these commercials. It's developed a Magic Lens, a video effects generator, which can produce 35 optical tricks. The lens permits insertion of electronic picture cutouts into any part of the ty screen.

It's panel-controlled so the size, shape and screen location of the cutout can be easily and quickly changed. Geometrical patterns conform to an advertiser's logo, trademark or package shape. These can be used in a variety of wipes—horizontal, vertical and diagonal—as well as in split-screen techniques.

WRC-TV is using it carefully, however, because trick shots can be too gimmicky. Its best use: for commercial impact and product demonstration, says Bill Coyle.

limited budget. If the same tv commercial techniques used for Ballantine Beer were used for Ballantine Ale, it would have amounted to pouring the ale contribution into the beer ocean. We had to set up a clear-cut difference between the two.

"Puppetry had not been widely used in beer commercials," Forest went on. (For about three years up until 1955, Goebel Beer through Brook, Smith, French & Dorrance Agency, showed a puppet series called "Brewster the Rooster" but only in a few areas such as Detroit and Oakland, Cal. These too were the product of Joop Geesink through Transfilm. Some 21 commercials were filmed and Brewster the Rooster enjoyed a popularity in his markets comparable with Harry and Bert Piel in theirs.)

So Esty went to Amsterdam for an unusual technique that would give their client a decided plus. Cost was not a deciding factor. Forest figures the cost compares with that of any good U. S. animation house—about $75 to $125 per foot for raw footage. The sound tracks were done in the U. S. The release prints and mailings to tv stations were done in the U. S. also. Four "Brewer's Gold" commercials have been completed, two are in production and more are being planned.

Esty is also producing with Joop Geesink a series of 3-D commercials for Prestone "We're trying to take a nuts-and-bolts subject and make it interesting," says Forest. To him, the commerical for any product must be tackled as an individual problem. Hard and fast rules, or what technique is currently fashionable cannot be applied. High style and abstract animation, in Forest's opinion, are being overdone right now.

"Tv commercials." he says, "demand more and more ingenuity on the part of agency producers in getting closer to the people through simplicity and honesty. Too many commercials are gimmicked up and apparently produced more for the sake of impressing colleagues and entertaining co-workers."

The Esty formula obviously is to pick the studios that excel in the technique needed to convey this simplicity and honesty. A live-action film might conceivably be turned out in France or Rome, but this would depend on the kind of talent available over there or on the nature of the product to be sold.

"If you want an all-American girl in a typical American kitchen," Forest says, "better do it here."

RADIO BASICS JULY

This is the third of sponsor's new Radio Basics section. It will appear every four weeks and will complement and alternate with Tv Basics. Three sections make up Radio Basics. The first is a series of four indices, giving material, updated every four weeks for the most part, on number of homes, stations, sets in homes and sets sold or produced. The second section covers spot and will provide periodic indices of local listening in various markets and research material of interest to users of spot. The third, or network, section will emphasize web radio clients. It provides a complete list of network advertisers as of the week beginning with the date of each issue, together with information on programs used, days of the week bought and the amount of program time purchased by each client. Suggestions from readers as to content and format will be welcomed and used as a basis for future additions and revisions. Next Radio Basics will appear in the 17 August issue.

What is there about your market which a buyer has to see personally to understand

William McGrath, general manager, WIIDII, Boston

We at WHDH have long felt that location, ratings, brochures, and sales figures, while providing important information for the advertiser, do not cover a significant part of our story.

What the advertiser does not learn is the way Boston people listen to a station. In a city filled with local pride and tradition, a radio outlet, like the home-team, the city park and the favorite restaurant must have a personality that fits into the community picture. Only if a station builds such a "favorite son" atmosphere does it provide the quality of receptive listening.

Can an adman tell the degree to which a station is woven into a city's tradition without watching the group of men clustered around the Boston Common newsstand with portables listening to our Red Sox broadcasts.

You can't put the dozens of ways a station can become part of the community life into a mailer. Relaxing on a beach, the Bostonian listens to the tunes he requested when the mobile WHDH Request Wagon rode by. A mother looks out on a wintry blizzard and checks WHDH to see if her husband's factory and her child's school is opening that morning. The evening newspaper carries a disaster story and the family knows where to tune for details. A suburban area buzzes with excitement because of a remote of a regular broadcast is being done from one of the living rooms of a friend.

"a station is woven into a city's tradition"

The advertiser can get at the cold station facts upon request. However, it is the warm facts that equip a station with that extra selling power, and in Boston, these should be seen.

George Kapel, general sales manager KBET-T1, Sacramento, California

Admen who visit central California will see that Stockton is an integral part of the Sacramento area station coverage pattern, no longer subjected to fringe signals from outside market stations. In fact, the sister cities of Sacramento and Stockton are centers of the same market, and similar in almost every respect. Sacramento and Stockton economies are similar, based on the rich surrounding farm lands. Both are marketing and cultural centers for the valleys—Sacramento for the Sacramento Valley and Stockton for the San Joachim. Both are important government centers: Sacramento a state capital and Stockton a county seat.

"Both are marketing centers for the valleys"

There are many major social and economic bonds between the cities. The people of both share habits, fashions and social customs, unlike those of highly urbanized San Francisco. Even weather-wise. Sacramento and Stockton enjoy hot summers as opposed to the coolness of San Francisco.

KBET-TV, a coverage station, serves both cities. For example, the station's Shell News devotes equal time to news of both cities, and gives local news unavailable from an "outside" station.

Finally, visiting timebuyers see that KBET-TV is the only station that delivers the two cities and does it with dominant ratings in both.

Like tv. Buffalo's Metroplitan Area (Erie and Niagara Counties) has grown phenomenally in the past seven years. Its population has jumped 19.2 per cent to nearly 1.300.000. New buildings are changing the city's face and extending its suburbs.

Businessmen view the New York State Thruway, added power from the Niagara Falls redevelopment program and the opening soon of the St. Lawrence Seaway as guarantees of further growth. They see Buffalo's diversified industry as a bulwark against any business recession.

No faddists, residents of this 14th market area are conservative and thrifty. But manufacturers can find a solid market here. Weekly industrial earnings are $17 higher than the National average. And the people don't stint in enjoying the comforts their superior income affords. More than half own their own homes.

Tv is an excellent medium for the advertiser's dollar. Buffalo is primarily a "lunch pail town," according to the Chamber of Commerce. Home early, most working men have dined and start watching television before 6:00 p.m. But there are also many second and third shift workers to bolster the daytime viewing audience.

The attraction Niagara Falls holds for tourists is, of course, well known. There was a time when these vacationers were lost to the advertiser, but no longer. Roads leading there are lined with motels which now feature television in every room.

Eugene D. Hill, general manager, W.GTO, Haines City, Fla.

When we started operations at W-GTO, we were fortunate to recognize some important differences in the Florida market and were in a position to capitalize on them. We based our location, our coverage area, and our programing on a thorough consideration of these "Florida differences."

When buying the Florida market, many national advertisers fail to notice that Florida is unique. The natural tendency is to buy only the metropolitan areas and assume that the major segment of the market has been captured. Not so many years ago, this assumption might have been correct.

"largest mobile audience in the world"

However, today the area covered by W-GTO outside the Miami, Jackson-ville and Tampa-St. Petersburg metropolitan centers is Florida's second largest market in population and effective buying power, and continues to grow. It would not surprise us to see Florida become almost one continuous "suburban" area within ten years.

There is another important difference in the Florida market the huge "mobile audience": people who travel by car and listen to car radios. At Cypress Gardens, more than 1,000,000 cars park annually right next door to our new studios. Our latest count of out-of-state cars in the W-GTO coverage area shows slightly in excess of 7,000,000 cars annually, and this figure does not include local traffic.

To capture this "Auto-Plus" market a bonus above and beyond market figures derived from rating services — we at W-GTO use billboards and road-side spectaculars extensively to remind the auto audience that we program music and news for them.

In short, at W-GTO we feel that to capture the major parts of the Florida market, you must reach not only the major metropolitan centers, but also the rich, outlying areas, particularly in central Florida, and also the largest "mobile audience" in the world—and that's what we aim to do.

DISC-MAN'S HOLIDAY

ow does Pittsburgh's No. 1 disc jockey spend his vacation?

At a turntable, of course.

The disc jockey is WCAE's Jay Michael.
The turntable is Martin Block's, at WABC in New York.

Jay is one of six disc jockeys picked to run The Make Believe Ballroom for the six weeks that Martin is on his vacation. The select group was chosen for the job by Martin Block himself, who sought out the outstanding men in the field to mind the store for him.

IN PITTSBURGH, FAR OUT IN FRONT

All of which adds national recognition to the man who is far and away tops in his profession around Pittsburgh.

Pulse after Pulse, Jay Michael outpulls every other afternoon radio attraction in the market. The latest report (March-April, 1957) shows the Jaybird with ratings averaging 6.0 and soaring as high as 6.7.

HEAR FOR YOURSELF

If you're within tuning distance of WABC while Jay's in New York, we invite you to listen in. The dates are July 22 to 27. The time is 11 a.m. to Noon and 3 to 6 p.m., Monday-Friday; 9 a.m. to Noon and 6 to 7:30 p.m., Saturday. Hear for yourself why, with the Jaybird on your payroll, your sales in Pittsburgh will never take a holiday.

If you can't catch Jay on his New York appearance, your Katz man will be glad to bring over an audition disc...availabilities, too. Call him today. Ask him also about Davey Tyson, Tommy Riggs, Bill Nesbit and Gloria Abdou, four more reasons why WCAE is Pittsburgh's salesmanship station.

ADVERTISERS

Lever Brothers' latest promotion for Breeze, all-purpose detergent, is aimed at the teen-age market.

Reasoning behind the move:

- 1) The teen-age market accounts for more than a quarter of all food sales.
- 2) There are an estimated million new teen-age mothers each year.
- 3) In 1957 half of the nation's new brides will be tecnagers.

Method of promotion will be premium give-away of records from among the current top 10 best sellers.

Network radio, newspapers and magazines will be the principal media used for the promotion.

Mergers and acquisitions: Bond Pickle Co. has merged with Beatrice Foods. Bond will become a division of Beatrice Foods and retain its brand identity. . . . Bob Eastman continued this week to rip apart ABC Radio's morning schedule, tossing out three dramatic strips for the eventual substitution of personality shows.

NBC quickly picked up one of the trio. My True Story, an ABC standby for 15 years. The other two eliminations were Whispering Street and When a Girl Marries.

Eastman's philosophy anent the change: Live personality stanzas will not only blend in better with the a.m. anchor, Breakfast Club, but sidestep competing against to with drama.

Chronological notes: (1) Eastman disclosed these policy plans after NBC

Radio issued an annonneement that it had taken over My True Story. (2) BBDO, two days later, bought a butch of participations in the show for U.S. Steel's Operations Snowflake campaign.

The talent lineup on LET'S TALK SPORTS touches all bases . . . hits to all fields. It's a half-hour forum of facts and anecdotes, comment and criticism that the sports-minded in Western New York have come to appreciate and follow.

Typical of the Prestige Programs developed and produced by WBEN-TV for local sponsorship or participation, it combines seasoned talent of four staff sportscasters with a popular format, and presents it to the largest, most interested group your TV dollars can buy in Western New York.

LET'S TALK SPORTS precedes or follows the CBS Game of the Week (depending on game time). In the fall it follows Pro Football, in winter it will follow NHL Hockey. Twelve months a year this market is available to you. You can pick your season, name your game, and if your product fits this custom-tailored show you can look forward to sales results that will wear well and long in WBEN-TV's vast 18-county coverage area. Give us a call—or our national representatives: Harrington, Righter and Parsons—and LET'S TALK SPORTS. You'll like what you'll hear.

Idea from KYW, Cleveland, re station's "Sing and Sell" summer sales plan:

1. KYW worked out an exclusive series of jingles tailored to tie in with such services as weather, traffic. sports and places to go.

2. Then service announcements were offered either in combination or as one exclusive service to both local and national advertisers.

Results: a complete sellout of the series in the first two warm weather months.

Humorous note on commercials: WVNJ, Newark, reports it has been getting letters asking if Mrs. Westing and Mrs. House are going to marry the Piel Brothers.

The ladies causing all this talk are the two commercial characters created by Westinghouse Appliance Sales Corp. for a one-station saturation test.

Original purpose was to promote the theme that the revolving agitator in the Westinghouse Laundromat does away with the need for a lint trap, but since Mrs. Westing and Mrs. House have brought out such listener response, WASCO has decided to use the two to promote other home appliances.

WASHINGTON WEEK

The fee ty squabble shifted this week from the FCC back to Congress.

First, Rep. Emannel Celler served notice on the FCC to abandon plans for a trial of the pay-as-yon-look system.

Then, Rep. Frank Chelf let the Commission know in no uncertain words that it was to pay no attention to Celler and anybody else "in or out of government."

Celler had sent a letter to FCC chairman John C. Doerfer in which he restated many of the points already made by Rep. Oren Harris about the trial concept.

Said Celler: Fee ty would be fine if it would merely provide new finances for regular broadcast services; but what the fee system probably would do is jeopardize free ty.

Further argued Celler: A narrow test wouldn't give worthwhile answers. On the other hand, a broad trial of fee ty would be impossible to reverse and thus would "involve a calculated risk of such magnitude" that Congress should make the decision.

Chelf, a high-ranking member of the House Judiciary Committee, of which Celler is chairman, took violent issue with this view and a similar one advanced to the FCC by Harris, chairman of the House Commerce Committee.

Asked Chelf of Chairman Doerfer: "Since when has it been a calculated risk to give to the people of the United States the right to decide whether a commodity is good or bad?"

Chelf said the FCC has the legal power to act on a test and give the matter "fair" consideration. He cantioned Docrfer:

"At this late hour do not allow anybody, no matter what position he may hold in or out of government, to attempt to either pressure or intimidate you."

The Mexican and North American broadcasting treatics appear to have been stymied.

About 70 daytime stations were able to swing enough weight to hold off action, despite the fact that the FCC, State Department and bulk of the broadcasting industry pleaded with the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee to recommend the treaties approval.

Ray Livesay, chairman of the Daytime Broadcasters Association, told the subcommittee that his group had voted 69 to 1 against ratification for this season.

The treaty with Mexico would freeze present use of the channels on which 250 daytimers operate, thus "prejudging" the case the daytimers have presented to the FCC for longer hours of operation.

Said Sen. Fulbright, the chairman of the subcommittee:

Because of the determined opposition, it would be useless to present the pacts to the Senate in view of the need of a two-thirds' vote for treaty ratification. The difference will have to be compromised within the industry.

Meantime the Clear Channel Broadcasting Service and FCC Commissioner Hyde warned that operations without international control could be chaotic.

A bid for reconsideration of the proposal to forbid use of one-channel boosters with vhf stations came up before the FCC this week.

The plan was made by a delegation from the Rocky Mountain states, including Colorado Governor Nichols.

Their argument: Big distances out west and the mountainous terrain make boosters necessary even with vhf stations.

CBS, Inc., may make some small investments in European ty operations.

Frank Stanton has asked his retired to network president, Jack Van Volkenburg, to make a tour with an eye open for that kind of thing.

Van Volkenburg now has the problem of fitting in the assignment with the new home he's building in N. C.

Taxi fares are not pin money to major New York agencies.

In explaining why it moved to glittering uptown quarters this week, DCS&S said that—among other things—it will save $10,000 a year in transportation charges.

(The agency estimates it will do $17.5 million this year.)

Competition in the home permanent field is getting tighter as women's tresses grow shorter.

Sales were down 10% last year, may drop again this year.

The Yankees and General Motors are kindergarten operators in promoting internal competition for sharpness' sake, says Madison Avenue. P&G is top nominee among agency men.

And it works beautifully for P&G: It keeps the agency stable trotting out new media and marketing concepts—some of them involving brands in other shops.

An illustration of the speed at which advertising decisions are made in the air age: Eastman Kodak wrapped up its $5.5 million deal for the Ed Sullivan show within 48 hours after JWT pitched the package.

Even a mid-Atlantic phone conversation with Europe-bound chairman of the Eastman board, Thomas H. Hargrave, was involved in the rush to the wire.

Latest magazine to seek subscriptions via the P.I. route in radio is Street & Smith's Living.

Deal offered: The station gets 40¢ out of each $1 subscription.

Each field has its cluster of industry-minded individuals who tackle and articulate the problems of their business as a whole—often through trade associations and similar groups.

In advertising, a list of such "solid citizens" would include:

Bhiss, in discussing commercial treatment for his ty clients, says "the client often wants the obvious way, and this is certainly the easy way out. But in buying Garry Moore, for example (Best Foods sponsored him on the CBS TV network), we use him as a salesman. We try to understand his personality and his way of thought. We write material that utilizes all his special commercial values. We disarm the audience so they don't duck the commercial."

Ludgin was ahead of most agencies, and almost all advertisers, in forecasting the importance of television a decade ago. It was a very small agency 10 years ago yet even then it sought the new and the unexpected. Television was both.

Jane Daly, who in 1947 was almost a one-woman radio department and who is now vice president in charge of radio and television. urged management to point its thinking directly toward television. Management did just that, mulling tv's future for two years, buying its first tv campaign in 1949 and continuing strong in the medium ever since.

Says Miss Daly: "We have always had a creative approach to buying and to other broadcast functions not normally considered creative. We—as every other department here—reach out for the new, not merely because it is new but because we want to capitalize on the unexpected and be flexible. This is what threw us into ty perhaps before we should have been.

"We latched onto tv very quickly. We've always approached the problem of how to use it (and all media. of course) with a full briefing on the over-all account problems and the creative approaches being used. We've worked hard and fast to keep up with television. So far, we haven't had much of a chance to philosophize about it."

If she did have a philosophy, she says it would be: the more fully informed a buyer is about the account problems the better that buyer operates and the more successful the campaign. The buyer at Ludgin, for example, will make it a point to hear ETs, see films, or read copy slated for every broadcast campaign because certain elements might not jibe with local market tastes, the character of the station being bought, adjacent shows, and the like.

Miss Daly heads a broadcast department staff totaling 16 persons and they work also with service and production people in Hollywood and in New York.

The jobs break down to: director, one; producers, three: timebuyers, three: traffic, two: secretaries, three; clerical, three; research, one. She has a tv-radio research specialist in her department, separate from the research unit.

She functions as a buyer, largely on network shows, with Ruth Babick, chief buyer, and buyers Marilyn Bielefeldt and Kay Morgan on the spot campaigns. Her production staff, which works on tv and radio commercials: Clair C. Callihan, A. David Cloud, Jr., and S. Hooper White.

Miss Daly says her greatest concern today is the "increased and the increasing costs of television. To is being narrowed down to the advertisers for whom it really works. Time and talent rates and commercial costs make the successful use of television more hazardous than ever before."

There's no room for the mediocre buy, she says. She sees as "musts": more effective commercial use, continually improved time schedules. "no wholesale buying or handling." analysis of every spot announcement in any client's schedule at least once a month—"handling each announcement like a show buy"—improvement in the product itself rather than cost cutting to get maximum value from the client's investment.

Ludgin puts a lot of emphasis on network programs, supplementing many of its show schedules with spot. Commercials scheduled within a show should be "a part of that show," in Miss Daly's opinion.

"The commercial interruption should be as unobtrusive as possible. We think we get a more smooth handling of copy if we use program settings and program personalities (such as Curtis did with Ray Bolger on the Washington Square series last season on NBC TV). The more smooth the transition into a commercial from the program, the fewer undesirable punctuation marks for the viewer.

"To the person watching, the commercial is a part of the show. The program can give the commercial the right aura or framework for presentation. The commercial, of course, is the major justification for having a show at all," she says.

A big item in program protection in developing and keeping andiences to a particular program—is a combination of publicity and merchandising. In her opinion, this can make the difference between "complete satisfaction and mere acceptance of a program."

Ludgin's buying technique for time periods, either network or spot, follows the same precepts set down for the purchase of million-dollar programs or for development of a five-year marketing plan. Even though the agency is emphasizing the use of ratings and analyses more than ever before, "we would fight to the bitter end buying on sheer cost-per-1.000," says the ty-radio director. "Ratings are like any other mechanical tool: you look at it, walk around it, use it if necessary but put it aside as more facts come into play."

Ratings are only "a guide," says chief buyer Ruth Babick. "We never buy on cost-per-1,000 alone because anyone who really tries can come up with a colossal cost figure."

The function of timebnying is equally significant—no more, no less than that of copy and art preparation. These jobs are handled by 12 artists (seven of whom are art directors) and 12 writers (seven are senior writers) under the direction of John H. Willmarth, executive vice president and creative director.

In his department, as in every other, there is much lateral movement to other areas of creative endeavor so there's a minimum of blueprint and red tape. Every writer and artist has an opportunity to develop his own talents in television, for example, although it may end up that his forte is magazine illustration or copy instead.

Willmarth, after observing many of his artists and writers functioning in the complex field of tv ideas and storyboards, says the writer habitually makes a greater visual contribution to a ty commercial than does the artist. Willmarth is working to get a better balance between the two, with the artist contributing copy ideas and the writer contributing visual plans.

In line with the ty and radio department's plan of showing Museum of Modern Art films to all employees. Willmarth subscribes to another similar iden. The agency has regular dimer meetings during the winter season. An account supervisor presents the full story of his account to everyone who works at Ludgin. He goes into the ramifications of the product itself, its production problems, company history, the marketing plans and objectives and the merchandising program.

This pays off all down the line. Even the newest steno, after attending one of these meetings, has a new and bigger grasp of the Tidy House correspondence as she types letters. And, at the planning level, the research people see how their work meshes into the projects of merchandising and account service and client planning.

Ludgin's research program market, copy and media — is headed by W. S. Robinson, vice president. He thinks all phases of agency research are broadened and made more meaningful by close cooperation with the creative staff.

The agency is pioneering in the field of copy research, particularly, and is also seeking new techniques in market research. Ty copy research is particularly vital as more money is being ponred into the medium by an increasing number of clients.

Of one thing Robinson is very sure, in a research field filled with vast uncertainties: "There is still no substitute for the brilliant creative man turning out a commercial he feels and believes in. There's no need for friction between research and creative."

Bliss, looking toward the agency's future, says "Creativity, as important as it is, is not the only thing which shores us up for the future. We are one of the strong marketing agencies and this is the base on which the creative work originates.

"Marketing is the bedrock of advertising. This will be more true in the future than it is today. The only agency which will survive in the consumer field is the marketing agency."

Oldtime steamboat races along our Ohio River Valley were often close, and hazardous to put your money on. Quite different from today's audience race among TV stations. When you put your money on WSAZ-TV, you've picked THE winner. Survey after survey gives the title to this 69-county giant — and the latest Nielsen is no exception. Consider these WSAZ-TV margins over the next-best station:

95,670 more homes per month 99,430 more homes per week 101,130 more daytime homes, weekdays

100,580 more nighttime homes, weekdays

WSAZ-TV steams with comparable popularity across a fourstate domain wherein almost $4,000,000,000 buying power awaits advertisers who like to ride with the winner. The gangway is down at any Katz office.

Reps at work

Bob Howard, NBC Radio Spot Sales, New York, feels "agencies should develop a new attitude toward their timebuyers, who are sometimes underpaid and often overworked. The buyers should be accorded prestige commensurate with their responsibilities and should have adequate time to make the best possible purchases."

Bob also thinks that agencies are missing a good bet if they over-look the fact that spot radio can make valuable tie-ins with local distributors. This can be accomplished as well by spot campaigns as by network broadcasting or national magazines. Another factor which agencies ignore, he says, is that the entire weekend is a good buy for a saturation radio schedule because prices are low and almost everyone is available for weekend listening. Throughout the summer vacation months, radio is the only broadcast medium which reaches masses of people in their cars, in parks and at the beach. Instead of taking a "nobody buys during the summer" attitude, sponsors should study the sales situation in their own industry. They may find it profitable to continue spot radio advertising through the summer for very little money."

Howard B. Myers, vice president in charge of the Chicago office, Venard. Rintoul & McConnell, says: "Over-commercialization of radio stations has concentrated the advertiser's demand for specific time periods—usually prime times of early morning and early evening. Few advertisers buy Sunday, for instance, yet there are cases where there's a 25% tune-in on Sunday with a station getting 40% of the audience. Advertisers have the naive idea that when an announcer says go down to the store to buy product x this is what people do. They don't. The function of broadcasting is to impress as many people as possible as often as possible with the brand name so it comes to mind when the shopper actually goes to market. You make this impression as easily on Sunday afternoon as you can 7 to 9 a.m. during the week. In addition, there's not so much competition for listener attention in these so-called off hours. During prime hours the advertiser is vying for attention, as well as for the listener often against a competitive product. Non-prime time reaches this audience with less competition."

Harry W. Chesley, Jr., is the new president of D'Arcy Advertising Co. Announcement of Chesley's election was made by Robert M. Ganger, chairman of the board of the advertising agency. Chesley succeeds the late Percy J. Orthwein who died last week. Before Chesley joined D'Arcy as executive vice president and a director of the company, he was vice president in charge of marketing for Philip Morris Co. As D'Arcy president he will continue to make his headquarters in St. Louis. Along with Chesley's appointment. D'Arcy also announced that Ganger will take over as chairman of the executive committee in addition to his other duties. At the same time the following men were made v.p.'s: Petersen B. Marzoni, research director. New York; William Raidt, account supervisor, New York; and Peter Cavallo, radio-ty director, Chicago.

George C. McConnaughey who recently resigned as chairman of the FCC has opened a law office in Washington, D. C. in partnership with George O. Sutton and Robert D. L'Heureux. McConnaughey is also former chairman of the Renegotiation Board, chairman of the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio and president of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners. Sutton has been active in the practice of communications law for the past 27 years and L'Heureux recently served as Congressional hiaison for the FCC. Taking McConnaughey's place as a member of the FCC is Frederick W. Ford, former first assistant to the Deputy Attorney-General. Ford previously served the FCC from 1947 to 1953 as chief of the Hearing Division of the Proadcast Bureau. Earlier John C. Doerfer became FCC chairman.

John R. Mahoney has been appointed station manager and sales manager for WIBG. Philadelphia, according to an announcement made by Lionel F. Baxter, managing director of WIBG and vice president of Storer Broadcasting Co. The 10,000 watt radio outlet in Philadelphia was recently bought by Storer. Mahoney has been with WIBG since 1954. He joined the station as a sales representative and was made general manager in 1956. His earlier broadcasting background was also in Philadelphia at WIP and WFLN. He served both of those stations in sales capacities. Mahoney is active in extra-curricular industry activities, presently serving as secretary of the Philadelphia Radio Broadcasters Association, is also a member of the TV-Radio-Advertising Club of Philadelphia. He is a University of Pennsylvania alumnus.

SPONSOR SPEAKS

It's a great system

When Hurricane Audrey struck the Gulf Coast, radio and television stations throughout a wide area raced into action. They reported on the progress of the storm, sending out warnings which literally saved thousands of lives. Often at great personal risk, and via mobile units, phones and helicopters, broadcasters sent back minute-by-minute reports on where the danger was greatest. Stations threw advertisers off the air left and right in order to concentrate on service.

This they did voluntarily and as part of a great public service tradition. Once again they demonstrated the caliber of the American broadcasters and the virtues of the free system of broadcasting.

Storer's 30 years

The Storer Broadcasting Co. owns 12 stations in eight markets. Yet each of its stations is operated with a focus on local community needs and local service. This is perhaps the secret of Storer's success and certainly a tribute to the operating philosophy of George B. Storer and his associates.

Storer has been in business 30 years, celebrating its 30th anniversary this month, and yet has never lost its sense of youthful growth and excitement. You have only to visit any of the Storer stations to know this is so. (The stations: WSPD. WSPD-TV, Toledo; WJW, WJW-TV. Cleveland; WJBK WJBK-TV, Detroit; WAGA, WAGA-TV, Atlanta: WIBG, Philadelphia; WWVA, Wheeling, W. Va.; WPFH-TV. Wilmington; WGBS, Miami.)

Between its bright yellow covers you will find nine "Use" sections, each with a dual purpose: (1) for use immediately in planning and decision-making; and (2) for use over the entire year to come as a basic reference.

It was because so many readers pointed out to us that our July annual Basics book was of value the year-round that we decided to change its name from Fall Facts Basics to Tv and Radio Basics.

this we fight for: There's a big job to be done in training new timebuyers who've been entering the field in droves. Radio's fundamentals, particularly, are overlooked. We suggest agencies review their training programs.

10-SECOND SPOTS

Summing up: Overheard in an agency corridor where the new exec was being discussed in absentia: "A very sympathetic guy—in fact, he practically drips off his pedestal."

Back to natural: Hit Parade Cigarette has a commercial featuring the "Tip-Off Test" which suggests smokers tear off filters of various brands and compare the difference in taste. Does this mean that "Your taste can't tell if the filter's there?"

Enterprising: Giuseppe Ruggiero, Italy's to promotion chief in charge of distributing show prizes such as refrigerators, to sets and autos, went to jail recently charged with rigging giveaway programs. He is said to have chosen contestants who would give him kick-backs. Well, that's one way of screening show candidates.

Top secret: Latest story on Ford's new Edsel comes from Beverly Hills where Foote, Cone & Belding along with Ford officials were secretly filming ty commercials against unveiling day. Several kids with cheap cameras slipped past security guards, snapped pix. Production staffers cornered kids, made deal to buy cameras for $3. They accepted, bought more cameras, pocketing their profit, and returned. This time they held out for $4. The last going rate on camera purchases by FC&B was quoted at $5 per.

Huh? From the latest Teen-Age Survey, Inc. report: "Our interviewers report a trend toward ballads and sweet music even though rock and roll appears to be stronger than ever." A trend that runs smack into a contradiction.

Hoch in der luft: Stuttgart, West Germany. boasts a 700-foot tv tower that has two restaurants, tv and radio transmission facilities and an observation platform 500 feet from the ground. Not quite as high as the Eiffel Tower, but it sounds more utilitarian.

Fan mail: In Washington, WWDC radio d.j. Fred Fiske was sent the following poem from a lady listener in Silver Spring, Md.:

Freddie Fiske's my daytime friend, l have no other choice. I never listen to what he says. I only hear his voice.
